Hello from the CEO

Welcome to 2020s Carers News publication.

Much of our time since the last edition centred on either the launch of the Carer Gateway on 6 April, and more recently the spread of the Corona Virus (COVID-19) globally, including Tasmania.

By now you will have received emails or letters from us regarding the spread of COVID-19, and its impact on services, including suspending peer support groups, offering counselling only by telephone or video-link, and shutting our offices to visitors. Like you, we are doing all we can to stay healthy and safe.

We are quickly approaching the April rollout of the new Carer Gateway services. We have provided an update on page 4 in order to help you prepare for the changes in service. We understand that given the current circumstances these changes may be challenging and assure you that we are with you each step of roll-out process.

As you may be aware, Carers Tasmania has created a new wholly owned organisation named Care2Serve. The Board made this strategic decision to ensure no conflict of interest exists between the advocacy work of Carers Tasmania (as the peak body for family carers) and the services for carers that will now be delivered through Care2Serve. For more information about Care2Serve, you can visit our new website at care2serve.com.au.

We are pleased to present an interview with Senator the Hon. Anne Ruston, Minister for Families and Social Services. In this interview Ms. Ruston comments on the importance of carers to the Australian economy, the challenges carers face, and what the future of carer support in Australia looks like.

We estimate that there is a young carer in every 27 students in Tasmania. We have lobbied for almost two years to have young carers routinely identified and supported in schools. As part of that campaign, in this edition we are pleased to share a story from a Principal's perspective of a small rural school.

Until next time, take care and don't hesitate to contact us if you need support in your caring role during these trying times.

Regards,

David Brennan
Chief Executive Officer, Carers Tasmania

Carer Gateway

Launches 6 April

As we approach the April rollout of the new Carer Gateway services we wanted to update you on the changes, and what they mean for you as a carer.

New carer supports through the national Carer Gateway will be available with the launch of services in Tasmania on 6 April 2020.

The Carer Gateway has been designed by the Australian Government to make it easier for carers to obtain information, advice and support in their caring role.

By having a single phone number and website and by reducing the number of organisations nationally from over 140 down to 10, carers will now find it easier to access support.

1. Carer Support Planning

All carers enter the Carer Gateway by calling 1800 422 737 or requesting to be called back through carergateway.gov.au.

To access supports all carers must as the first step complete a Carer Support Plan and register.

This starts with a conversation with our Carer support Officers on the phone, face-to-face or via video link.

2. Accessing Carer Supports

Under the Carer Gateway, supports will include:

- Facilitated peer support sessions and groups

- Carer coaching (from next year)
- Emergency respite
- One-off financial supports
- Carer Directed supports
- Information, advice and referrals
- National online services, such as telephone counselling, online carer forums, plus training and coaching modules
- George Town Neighbourhood House
- Devonport Neighbourhood House
- Riverlands Centre (Longford)
- DV Community House (New Norfolk)
- Prosser House/SECC (Orford)
- SECC Sorell
- St Helens Neighbourhood House
- May Shaw Health Center (Swansea)

Support packages can either be a one-off financial support of up to $1,500 or a package of supports up to $3,000. The packages will be based on carers assessed need, and only one may be accessed within a 12-month period.

Regional Access

We have partnered with a range of local community organisations to provide access points for carers around the state. Called Carer Kiosks, these kiosks will provide carers with access to the new Carer Gateway services, as well as the ability to receive remote help and counselling from Care2Serve via telephone or videolink.

We are delighted to advise of our partnership with the following organisations:

- Beaconsfield House
- Dorset Community House
- Dunalley Neighbourhood House

- Wyndarra Community & Resource Centre (Smithton)
- Zeehan Neighbourhood House

Access for CALD Carers

In order to develop a service that is accessible for all Tasmanians, we have partnered with the Migrant Resource Centres to provide tailored services to culturally and linguistically diverse carers in the north and south of the state.

Contact

For the first time ever there will be a single contact point for all carers across the country.

- Call 1800 422 737
- Go to carergateway.gov.au

If you call the 1800 number you will be directed to Care2Serve, as we are your Tasmanian Carer Gateway Service Provider.

In the Loop

Health Communities Mentor Program

Burnie Office Back in the CBD

Our offices have found a new home in Burnie. Now located at 71 Mount Street (co-located with Roberts Real Estate), our office is now in a central, accessible location with plenty of nearby short-term parking available. If you have to head into the office for an appointment, just let the friendly staff at the reception of Roberts Real Estate know that you are there.

We are delighted to have received support from Healthy Tasmania in order to deliver the Health Communities Mentor Program to carers across regional areas of the state, with delivery in Bridgewater, Burnie, Clarendon Vale, Derwent Valley, Devonport, Georgetown, Kingston, and St Helens.

Rolling out over a two-year period starting in 2020, this initiative will provide five modules dedicated to providing carers with practical skills and knowledge to enhance both their physical and mental wellbeing.

COVID-19 Financial Support

If you've lost your job, seen a reduction in hours, or are unable to work due to being isolated or caring for children you may be eligible for one of the following payments:

- Youth Allowance
- Jobseeker Payment
- Parenting Payment

On top of the initial rates for these payments, the government have also added an additional $550 a fortnight starting from 27 April 2020, as well as two Economic Support Payments of $750.

The typical one-week waiting period has been waived for claims between the 12 March–12 June 2020, as well as expanding the eligibility criteria for certain payments.

If you've lost your job and you're claiming a payment, you'll no longer need to provide Centrelink with a separation certificate from April 27. However, if your hours have reduced, you'll need to provide a confirmation letter from your employer.

To register and make a claim, head on over to my.gov.au.

The government have also increased the number of days that a family can claim the Child Care Subsidy in cases where their child is absent from 42 to 62 for the 2019–20 financial year.

COVID-19 (Coronavirus) Update

The Coronavirus pandemic has dominated all forms of social commentary over recent weeks, and understandably, many of us are feeling overwhelmed, stressed and fearful about what is to come.

As the peak body for carers we are taking advice from leading health professionals and continually monitoring the situation, in order to tailor our work practices and deliver the most relevant information to carers. We recommend you keep an eye on our website and social media pages for the most up-to-date information.

In the meantime, we recommend you to take care of yourself and those around you by practicing good hygiene and self-isolating wherever possible.

Stay up-to-date

Carers News Magazine

This is the final edition of Carers News in this format, as we move on to innovative ways of informing and engaging our community of supporters and carers. Looking back over the years, here are some of our favourite covers.

Getting back on track after trauma

When you experience a traumatic event, it can be difficult to imagine what life will look like in your new reality. You may have lost a loved one, your home, or a job. No matter what it is, you probably feel overwhelmed and uneasy about what the future may hold.

Everyone copes with traumatic events differently and there is no blueprint for getting your life back on track. Nor is there a suggested amount of time for doing so.

The following suggestions are broad and can be applied to most situations. The most important thing to do is that you listen to yourself and be mindful of what you need during this difficult time.

Acknowledge

Reflect upon the trauma you have experienced and acknowledge how it has made you feel. You may be experiencing a mix of emotions — sadness, anger, humiliation — it can help to name them and explain why you are feeling that way.

Straight after the traumatic event, you will probably be experiencing shock and an acute feeling of loss. While you may not believe it now, the heightened feelings you are experiencing will fade over time. If possible, avoid making big decisions during this time as your judgement may be clouded by your emotions. In situations where decision-making is unavoidable, take the time to talk through your decisions with loved ones or a professional.

Just because a traumatic event does not directly affect you, it does not mean you will not be affected by what has happened. This may be the case when, for example, a friend loses a loved one, or you hear about horrific world events in the news. Vicarious trauma is “the negative transformation in the helper that results (across time) from empathetic engagement with trauma survivors and their traumatic material, combined with a commitment or responsibility to help them.”¹

This form of trauma often occurs in people working in the health and mental health system, housing, law enforcement, legal system, emergency services and family services. Workers in these fields either continuously experience traumatic events while trying to help others, or hear stories of trauma from people seeking help.

“You may be experiencing a mix of emotions — sadness, anger, humiliation — it can help to name them and explain why you are feeling that way.”

Be realistic

Be realistic about how long it will take you to feel better or 'back to normal' again. Everyone grieves differently and there is no such thing as a correct way to grieve. Some people may choose to 'bottle up' their grief, while others are happy to discuss it openly. It might take you months to feel 'normal', or even years.

While it might feel better to lay or to assign blame on someone for something which has taken place, it is unlikely to achieve anything. Instead, keep open conversations going with your loved ones. If you feel anger is stopping you from having a constructive conversation with someone, take your distance from them until you feel ready to start the conversation.

Take care of yourself

In the aftermath of a personal crisis, taking care of yourself is probably the last thing on your mind. By eating well and exercising regularly, you're setting yourself up to feel the best you can. In addition to being a healthy distraction, regular exercise can also help to relieve stress and give you small, achievable goals to strive for.

When friends, neighbours and family members offer help, perhaps a chat over a cup of tea or a meal cooked for your family, accept it. It can be easy to isolate yourself in times of grief, but connecting with others can greatly improve your state of mind. In particular, talking with your loved ones about the traumatic event can help you begin to process what has happened.

Leaving the comfort of your home might be the last thing you feel like doing after something terrible has happened however, once the initial shock of the event has passed, it is important to resume the everyday activities that make you feel like yourself again. Whether it's pushing yourself to take a walk once a day, going to see a friend twice a week or attending a regular support group meeting, setting yourself achievable goals can do wonders for your mental health.

In addition to talking with your loved ones, speaking to a counsellor or psychologist is a good idea if you have experienced trauma. Speak to your GP first about setting up a mental health plan.

Healthy Habits, A Family Affair

When she joined Carers Victoria's Young Carer program in 2018, Anna* was feeling the pressure of her caring role. At 16 years old, Anna is the primary carer for her Mum who has diabetes.

A typical day for Anna includes reminding her Mum to take her medication, translating for her Mum during medical appointments, tending to her needs at home and completing household chores. In addition to providing emotional support. Anna's life is a constant juggle as she negotiates these tasks with going to school, completing her homework and being a regular teenager.

After speaking with a carer advisor, areas where Anna needed support were identified. Anna's stress was impacting her ability to sleep and concentrate at school. She also struggled with her own health issues, including managing her weight and an intellectual disability. As a result, Anna would attend regular specialist appointments for herself on a regular basis.

Supporting Anna to make healthier lifestyle choices was identified as a priority. The Carers Victoria's Young Carer Program funded a six-month swimming membership and a 12-month gym membership. A Young Carer support worker, Tiffany*, accompanied Anna to her first swimming lesson to provide emotional support. Outside of supporting Anna's healthier lifestyle, Tiffany would also provide emotional support through regular catch-ups at a café to discuss any issues Anna might be having.

Socially, the Young Carer Program gave Anna the opportunity to attend regular events where she was able to connect with other carers her own age. Anna was an active participant at these events and enjoyed helping others when she could.

Recognising the difficulty in attending medical appointments, as neither Anna nor her mother could drive, the Young Carer Program also funded taxi vouchers to get Anna and her mother to their individual medical appointments.

One year on from the program, the change in Anna is remarkable. A healthy and more active lifestyle has seen her lose 20 kilograms and inspired Anna's mother to lead a healthier lifestyle herself. As a result, Anna's mother is now able to self-manage her diabetes more effectively.

Improvements to her own health, as well as her Mum's, has reduced Anna's stress levels, helped her focus on improving at school and led to the development of new, healthy habits. Anna graduated from the Young Carer Program in October 2019 and continues to go to the gym most days after school.

Anna is thrilled with her progress since she first joined the Young Carer Program and rated Tiffany 10 out of 10 for the positive impact she made on Anna's life.

Connecting the dots

As a health professional, Nicole Dunn's job is to connect her clients with appropriate health services. However, when she unexpectedly became a carer in her early 30's, Nicole found herself struggling to navigate the system. Drawing on this difficult time, Nicole has used her own experiences to help others.

When Nicole's grandmother, Roma, was rushed into the emergency department where Nicole was working, with a large mass on her pancreas, Nicole knew her grandmother's prognosis would not be good.

Roma was diagnosed with advanced pancreatic cancer, with a prognosis of one year. She would require an intense course of chemotherapy and a live-in carer. Nicole, just 32 at the time, put up her hand without hesitation.

Growing up, Nicole had always been close to her grandmother. Before her health deteriorated, Roma was an astute and fiercely independent woman. Nicole remembers summers running around her grandmother's house with her brother and learning to drive on her grandparents' ride-on mower.

Within two weeks of the diagnosis, Nicole had moved out of her own home and become a live-in carer. Nicole juggled work commitments with her grandmother's medical appointments, preparing meals, liaising with service providers and managing her medication. Roma's reliance on Nicole was a stark contrast to her former independent self.

Ritual became an important part of Roma and Nicole's lives as they settled in to living together. Nicole smiles as she remembers her grandmother's astute comments about the reality TV shows they watched during their regular happy hour.

While these moments brought some relief, Nicole struggled to watch her grandmother's rapid deterioration. Friends provided some support, but most did not understand the physical and emotional challenges of being a carer.

Nicole had always enjoyed playing netball and football. When her grandmother was diagnosed, she suddenly found carving out the time to pursue these activities as important as ever, as they became a great outlet for the emotional trials she was experiencing.

As a healthcare professional, Nicole had more insight into her grandmother's condition than most, but this was not always comforting.

"Working in health was both a blessing and curse. It's a blessing because you know what to do, but sometimes there is bliss in ignorance," she says.

Six months after her diagnosis, Roma started to rapidly deteriorate. After several near-misses, the decision was made to move her into residential aged care where she could be monitored more closely. Nicole continued to act as Roma's carer; taking her to appointments and spending as much time with her grandmother as possible.

After her grandmother passed away, Nicole started to reflect on the difficulties that she, as a health professional, had experienced in attempting to connect her grandmother up with appropriate services. If Nicole struggled, how would someone with no prior knowledge of the health and aged care sectors navigate these systems?

It was these ideas that led Nicole to establish her own consultancy business to help older people and their families connect to systems and services. Outside of work, Nicole has also made time to advocate for the needs of older people and their carers. Last year, she addressed the Royal Commission into Aged Care Quality and Safety at a hearing in Mildura. Nicole spoke about her own experiences as a carer, and advocated for the provision of flexible respite options and pre-counselling to better prepare carers for the caring role.

Not content to watch others undergo the same trials she did, Nicole's story is a wonderful example of how the skills and experiences acquired as a carer can be harnessed to help others throughout their caring journey.

Meet Anne Ruston

— Minister for Families and Social Services

Above // Anne Ruston spoke at the National Carers Week, Carers Australia Breakfast in October 2019.

Q. Minister, one in eight Australians is an unpaid family and friend carer. Has giving or receiving care affected you, or your family or friends?

I am fortunate that I have not been in a situation where a close family member or friend has needed care. I have, however, seen friends who have not hesitated to offer and provide care.

Through their efforts it has been clear to me that caring for a loved one can be tough and emotionally difficult but they have found the strength to support their loved ones in their time of need. There is no doubt in my mind that Australia's 2.7 million carers are this nation's unsung heroes.

Q. What do you identify as the contribution of family carers to the community and economy?

Our unpaid carers make a very significant contribution to our community and the economy at large. The work they do is part and parcel of the fabric of this country.

Their dedication to support their loved ones, often at the expense of their own health, wellbeing, work or study, is a selfless and important contribution to our community.

A report by Deloitte Access Economics from 2015 valued the role of unpaid carers was more than $60 billion – more than $1 billion per week.

By any measure, the contribution by carers is very significant.

Q. Australia has an estimated 2.65 million carers. What do you think are their biggest challenges?

No two caring roles are ever the same, nor are the demands or short-term or long-term effects of providing care. I think this is important to recognise. While some carers might need someone to talk to in the form of a professional counsellor, or help adjusting their lifestyles and future goals, others may require more practical supports such as financial packages or access to emergency respite.

Q. How is the Government addressing or planning to address these challenges?

It is vital our new service delivery model works and meets diverse public expectations and needs. That is why the Morrison Government has ensured these new reforms provide a diverse range of services and support, tailor made for carers.

This is why the Morrison Government has developed this reform to carer services following an extensive co-design process with carers and the carers sector over the past four years.

It was developed by carers for carers.

This will ensure that carers, irrespective of whether they live in regional, rural or remote areas, will have access to some form of support to ensure they get the help they need before reaching crisis point.

Q. Minister, you mention the Integrated Carer Support Service. Under this reform, how will you ensure that carers continue to receive the support they need in their caring role?

The Morrison Government is investing nearly $700 million over five years to introduce a new nation-wide system of supports for carers through Carer Gateway.

This reform has been the result of an extensive co-design process with carers and the carers sector over the past four years.

It has been developed on the premise that carers will not only continue to receive the support they need, but also provide access to early-intervention supports, when and where they need them, before reaching crisis point.

From April 2020, a new network of Carer Gateway service providers will use a mobile work force to bring services to carers in their local area.

To ensure a smooth transition, we have extended the funding of existing service providers until 31 May 2020. This will ensure continuity of support to carers during the important transition to the new Carer Gateway service providers.

This means that carers will have access to multi-faceted carer supports including planning; targeted financial support packages with a focus on employment, education, respite and transport; in-person and phone-based counselling and peer support; emergency and short term respite and assistance with navigating relevant, local carer services.

It is the single biggest reform in more than a decade to better support our carers where a new regional network of providers will deliver more than five times the number of services currently available.

Our reforms also promise to deliver a suite of support services on a more geographically equitable basis which will be easier to navigate and less fragmented than has previously been the case.

Q. What are you most proud of since becoming Minister?

With respect to helping carers, I am most proud of being able to sign-off on the roll-out of the new Integrated Carer Support Service.

Q. In terms of your own self-care, what are your top tips to share with carers?

Eat well, try and get some regular exercise, keep in touch with your friends and always have a good book to read.

Q. What personal message would you like to send to carers?

Our nation is indebted to the work you do. I commend the tremendous work carers do on a daily basis. I encourage all carers to look after themselves and if needed, seek support for themselves. Support is available. Being a carer can be hard but getting help early, through the Carer Gateway, can make a big difference.

Pushing the Boundaries

As we get older and our lives grow busier, it is natural to sink into a comfortable daily routine. As a carer, routine is often critical to ensuring the person you care for is happy and healthy, and for the carer themselves, routine means making sure all the tasks you cram in actually get done.

Just as routine helps the world go round, being flexible and open to new experiences can help you feel more fulfilled, creative and refreshed. Leaving some time in your week to push your own boundaries, whether by trying a new hobby, learning something new or meeting new people, is a way for you to break free of the constraints of your daily routine and bring new excitement and energy to your day.

Finding the time in a busy week for extra activities can be challenging, especially for carers. Before dismissing the idea of changing your routine, consider where you could find more time. It might mean getting up earlier, dropping something that is no longer meaningful or necessary, or swapping a regular activity for something new.

(Don't) get comfortable

Use this guide as a springboard. While this article makes some suggestions about how you can bring some positive change into your life, you may have your own ideas about hobbies you'd like to pursue or personal goals you'd like to achieve. Remember by testing your assumptions about which activities you enjoy, you might surprise yourself and find a hobby you never thought you would pursue.

Learn something new

Learning something new is the ultimate way to mix things up. Depending on your motivation, interests, time and budget, you may choose to gain a new craft skills, learn to cook your favourite food, build upon your professional skills or learn a language.

▲ To find out more

Visit our website to find out about carer-specific events and workshops near you.

Keep a journal

Journaling can be very cathartic for some people. It can be both a way to express yourself and let go of stressful events. Journaling doesn't have to be a written recount of whatever you've done that day or week. You may choose to write a brief dot-point summary of what you're doing or thinking, or you might like to keep a more focused journal, such as a 'gratitude journal' where you write down three things you are grateful for that day. Those who are more artistically inclined might like to draw pictures instead of writing, or you might enjoy writing poetry. Whatever way you choose to express yourself, your journal should be your private space to make sense of the world.

Raise your voice

What better way to push the boundaries and step out of your comfort zone than by becoming an advocate on an issue you are passionate about. Whether you use your lived experience to advocate for the needs of carers, or you choose to raise your voice about another issue close to your heart, advocacy is a meaningful way to create positive change, while building skills such as relationship building, community organising and lobbying.

Get physical

Finding the energy to get to the gym or go for a run can be a challenge, particularly as the weather takes a turn. If solo exercise isn't for you, consider joining a local sports team to get fit. Leave your stress behind for an hour or so, improve your strength and endurance, and best of all meet new people and connect with your local community. To stretch yourself a bit further, try a sport you've never played before.

Join a group

If meeting new people is your goal, start by checking out local social groups in your area. These groups are often centred around a theme, for example book clubs, film discussion groups, walking groups and board games groups. Check in with your local council to find out what's available near you.

If you'd like to connect with other carers, visit our website to find Carer Support Groups in your area. These groups are an opportunity for you to meet other carers and share common experiences and useful resources.

Carers in School: A Principal's Perspective

We recently spoke with a principal of a state primary school located just 50 minutes from downtown Hobart to understand issues facing students, particularly those caring for family members.

The semi-rural school currently enrolls less than 200 students. Of these, the principal notes more than 40% of students are affected by complex trauma, with ABS census figures showing that students in the area have above average rates of mental-illness, as well as above-average rates of single-parent households. When coupled with an increasing rate of family violence, these challenges lead to a unique set of challenges for educators, as children as young as five are being actively treated for depression and anxiety.

The principal believes part of their leadership role is to know not just the children but their family context too, as this is important to interpreting and understanding student behaviour. It is through this approach that more than 10 young carers have been identified between the ages of five and twelve years old.

When asked how he knew children were in caring roles he answered, "I get to know the families and the children intimately," and he recommends that others in education take a similar approach.

"I've had students as young as grade four who are in caring roles. Taking care of their little siblings — getting them up, making food and getting each other to school."

"In many cases educators need to see beyond children's behaviour — sit down, take the time to talk and find out their story."

You may be forgiven for thinking that the school has all the support it needs for these students. Not so. In this case, the school is funded for a social worker and psychologist for half-a-day per week. The principal has diverted funds to increase social work to one day per week and psychology to two.

The school wishes they could do more for their children, but recognise that some things are out of their control.

While they recommend that parents seek additional support for their children, many parents don't see this as an option — and services are just not there. Being located rurally, with many struggling to make ends meet, travelling for therapy and counselling is often considered impossible.

He noted that at times the school has felt helpless. "It's hard not feeling supported in this ... there's so much that we need to help care for these little people."

This principal's experience shines a light on the reality for Australia's young carers. In Australia there are more than 270,000 carers under the age of 25, comprising nearly 10% of the nation's carer population. Many of these young people fail to identify as carers, which in turn excludes them from accessing support services and resources available to them.

I've had students as young as grade four who are in caring roles. Taking care of their little siblings — getting them up, making food and getting each other to school.

Productivity Commission

– Inquiry into Mental Health

This national inquiry commenced in November 2018 with the purpose of understanding the effect of mental health on people's ability to participate and prosper in the community and workplace, and the effects it has more generally on our economy and productivity.

The Inquiry has been looking at how governments across Australia, professional and community groups in healthcare, education, employment, social services, housing and justice can contribute to improving mental health for people of all ages and cultural backgrounds.

The Carers Associations have been working to ensure the Productivity Commission (the Commission) understands the needs of carers, in terms of their role as a carer, but also relating to carer's own health and wellbeing.

In December 2019, the Commission published its Draft Report. Carers Victoria has just submitted its response.

The response focuses on carers in mental health settings, at schools, in workplaces and the financial impacts of providing informal or unpaid care. Carers Victoria recommends the Commission further considers the needs of carers from diverse communities; issues relating to psychosocial disability and the NDIS; and issues of affiliate stigma experienced by many carers, especially mental health carers.

Carers Victoria's submission to the draft report contains fifteen recommendations. The following are a selection of these recommendations.

- As every classroom is likely to contain two or three young carers, mandatory training is required for all teachers regarding the role played by young carers and the support they need to succeed at school.
- The Productivity Commission undertakes research into the most appropriate method of introducing a payment solution for unpaid carers within Australia's superannuation system.
- The Australian Government to mandate 'portability' of personal leave and carers' leave in the National Employment Standards.

- All State and Territory mental health services to adopt guidelines on working with families and carers as 'partners in care'. Where they don't exist already, the Victorian Chief Psychiatrist Guidelines are to be considered as an example. Relevant government departments to evaluate their implementation to ensure inclusion of families and carers becomes standard practice.

The Commission will provide a final report to the Australian Government on 23 May 2020.

10 Ways to a healthier mind and body

Now we are well and truly into the new year, it is likely well-intentioned new year's resolutions have taken a back seat. If you need a hand to get back on track, use the tips below as a checklist to help you feel the best you can.

1 Drink more water

It's an obvious one, but for good reason. If you struggle to stay hydrated, there are apps available which remind you to drink water. Many will allow you to set your own daily hydration goals and some will even tell you how much water you should be drinking based on your body mass.

2 Take a break

The caring role is consuming, so it can be easy to forget the importance of taking time out for yourself. Whether it's a walk or taking half an hour to properly enjoy a cup of tea and read the newspaper, this time to yourself is essential to performing your caring role to the best of your ability. If you're finding it too hard to take time out, call us to discuss respite options that may be available to you.

3 Exercise when you can

The general consensus is we should be doing at least 30 minutes of moderate physical activity per day.¹ If you really are unable to carve the time out of your schedule, consider how else you might meet this goal. Perhaps it's riding your bike to the shops, choosing to take the stairs wherever possible, going for a walk in the park at lunchtime, or searching YouTube for a free exercise class you can do from your living room.

4 Eat lighter

This is perhaps the most difficult new year's resolution to stick to! By swapping your usual burger for an interesting salad, or your afternoon chocolate snack for some fresh fruit and almonds, you'll find you have better concentration, more energy and feel healthier within yourself. Turn to page 18 for one idea to add to your healthy recipe collection.

5 Keep your friends close

Prioritise the friends who make you feel good about yourself. If you have any 'friends' who constantly put you down or make you feel bad about yourself, consider cutting them loose, they're probably not worth your time.

6 Try something new

Feel like you're too stuck in routine? Try mixing things up by meeting some new people, learning a new skill or going on an adventure to somewhere you've never been before. If you need some ideas to get you started, turn to page 12.

7 Fresh air

Don't underestimate the value in getting outside. Whether it's a hike in a national park or a short walk around the block in your lunch break, getting some fresh air can re-energise you and help you to reset for the tasks ahead.

8 See a doctor

Remembering to schedule medical appointments can be difficult, particularly when you're busy scheduling appointments for someone else. Regularly check in with your doctor to keep on top of any existing or potential medical issues. How often you should visit your doctor depends on your health, age and medical history, so ask your doctor how often is appropriate for you.

9 Slip, slop, slap

A downside of living in our beautiful country is our exposure to harsh UV rays, so remember to wear a hat and sunscreen if you're outside. It doesn't take long for sunburn to occur, so always take precaution, even in the cooler months.

10 Self-care: your way

Whether you like to take a bubble bath, meditate, call a friend or family member, or relax with your favourite TV show, it doesn't matter what your preferred form of self-care is so long as you're taking time out for yourself.

Falling through the Gaps: Removing Barriers to Testing for the National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS)

There is no argument that for many people with a disability who have successfully transitioned into the NDIS, their social and economic outcomes have greatly improved. However, the recent release of the Review of the National Disability Insurance Act 2013 (enacted to deliver the NDIS Scheme), identified numerous gaps and significant limitations on delivering consistency and equitable services to others requiring support and inclusion.

The provision of services to people with psychosocial disability for example, has been difficult, with a lack of clarity identified within the relevant legislation.

The Mental Health Council of Tasmania (contracted by Primary Health Tasmania) recently released its own report on barriers for individuals with mental ill-health in testing eligibility for the NDIS. Consultation was undertaken through surveys and focus group sessions with key Tasmanian stakeholders, including service providers, staff, clients, families, carers and people with lived experience of mental ill-health.

Feedback from those stakeholders identified five pertinent barriers to testing eligibility for the NDIS:

- The term ‘disability’ is not relevant to the individual’s experience
- There is a lack of clarity regarding NDIS’s eligibility criteria
- The process can be triggering, overwhelming and/or anxiety-inducing
- The difficulty in gaining evidence to support an application to the NDIS
- The individual’s condition prevents them from applying for the NDIS.

As a result, twelve recommendations were developed to assist in the removal of the above barriers. The recommendations are inclusive of people living with mental ill-health, their carers, families, peer workers and NDIS planners and assessment teams. (Of interest, an overall response from the participants of focus group sessions centered on NDIS staff and their lack of empathy with minimal knowledge about mental ill-health and psychosocial disability).

The National Psychosocial Support Advisory Group, of which Carers Tasmania is a member, is currently establishing a working group to progress the recommendations.

An important element of the working group is having representation of mental ill-health carers on the group, who possess experience in supporting a family member or friend with psychosocial support needs and who have completed the NDIS application process.

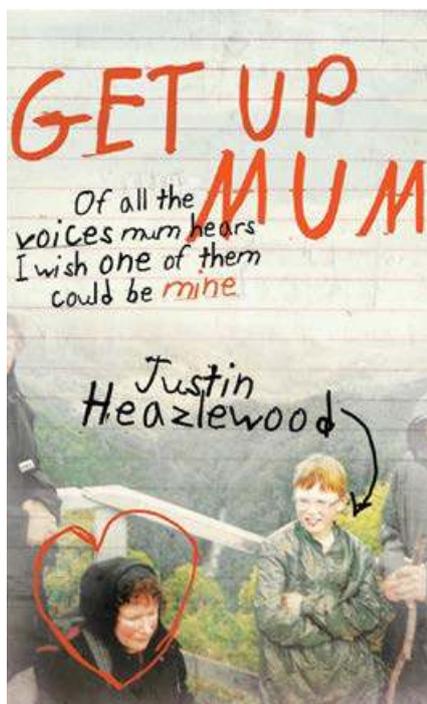

Calls for expressions of interest for the working group have been put out to mental ill-health carers.

Access to the report and recommendations can be found at primaryhealthtas.com.au/2020/02/removing-barriers-to-testing-for-the-ndis.

Get Up Mum

by Justin Heazlewood

Get Up Mum is Justin Heazlewood's childhood memoir describing his life growing up in Burnie, Tasmania, between the ages of 12 and 13. The story describes many typical aspects of pre-adolescence you might expect from a boy of that age: school, crushes, athletic carnivals, family relationships, and trips away.

Despite this 'normality', Justin's life as described in the book is far from what is typically considered 'normal'. The story tells of Justin's experiences living alone with his mother who suffers from Schizophrenia.

The story is humorous, heartfelt, raw and complex.

Throughout the book, the relationship between Justin and his mother ebbs and flows depending on his mother's health. The dynamics often change between Justin looking after his mother, and when she was well enough, her looking after him.

The book brings to light some of the struggles of caring for a loved one, particularly a parent. It describes moments where his mother's health wavered, and the unsure feelings surrounding whose role it was to take care of her.

The story also tells that despite her illness, she was always thoughtful of Justin and did the best she could as his mother given the circumstances.

Justin had a hobby of recording snippets of his life on cassette, which featured heavily in the writing of this book. He drew from these recordings to bring to life the stories of his childhood and recreate the events in writing.

Justin also has a radio series based on the memoir available at abc.net.au/radionational/programs/lifematters/features/get-up-mum.

Your Caring Way

Begin a new future that's all about you ...

Carers Queensland, in partnership with Carers Tasmania and Carers SA, is excited to introduce a new initiative funded by the Department of Social Services.

Rolling out from April 2020, we are offering a new program of services that focus upon carers wanting to pursue their own goals, like a new career.

It's called 'Your Caring Way...'

Carers change lives in so many ways and while this is a selfless act, we understand that carers need to realise their own dreams too.

Now we're here to support you in identifying and achieving your own goals in life.

We're here to listen, assist in learning, and ultimately create a step-by-step plan towards achieving fulfilment in your own life.

Your future, your way.

Plan – A coach will work with you to create a personalised plan based on your own life goals and aspirations.

Learn – Gain the skills you need to fulfil your goals through a range of study, training, or on-the-job opportunities.

Achieve – Whether it's employment, volunteering, or even further study, we will help you to live your best life.

We are here for you.

You are at the heart of what we do, and we are committed to be there for you, from start to finish.

Our Vocational Coaches will provide you with ongoing and individualised support to ensure you are connected, empowered, and on your way to success.
